

US labour market report due today

There was a mixed tone to investor sentiment yesterday, as European markets returned in full from the Labour Day Holiday. The Euro Stoxx 50 declined by 0.6%. On Wall Street, the S&P 500 registered a 0.9% rise, boosted by some strong Q1 earnings data. On bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields fell by 2-8bps.

Data-wise, a quiet macro calendar failed to provide any directional impact for markets. Of the limited releases to note, the latest US initial joblessness claims remained at 208k, broadly matching the consensus. Elsewhere, US productivity gains were weaker and unit labour costs were higher than anticipated in Q1. However, the data can be volatile and they did not spark a reaction on markets.

On the currency front, against the modest risk averse backdrop during the European session, traditional safe havens were in demand. The dollar, yen and Swiss franc were all on the front foot. However, the dollar handed back its gains overnight.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens in the lower half of $1.07-1.08. GBP/USD is operating at the midpoint of the $1.25-1.26 corridor. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is at the halfway mark of the 85-86p range. USD/JPY is down at the ¥153 threshold.

Today, the main highlight will be the US labour market report for April. Conditions in the labour market have softened slightly in recent months but remain tight overall. This trend is set to continue, with payrolls rising by 243k, the unemployment rate staying at 3.8%, and average earnings growth slowing to +4.0% y/y. Elsewhere, the US non-manufacturing ISM is projected to register a modest improvement to 52.0 in April, from 51.4. In the Eurozone, the unemployment rate is expected to remain at 6.5% in March.
